Respondent.)

Petitioner, a state prisoner proceeding pro se, filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2254. The court ordered respondent to show cause why the petition should not be granted. Respondent filed a motion to dismiss the petition as procedurally defaulted. Petitioner has filed an opposition. Respondent has filed a reply, and petitioner has filed an objection to his reply. Having considered all the pleadings, and for the reasons stated below, respondent's motion is GRANTED in part.

BACKGROUND

On February 6, 2009, petitioner was sentenced to a term of 25 years to life in state prison after being convicted of murder, two counts of attempted second degree robbery, and second degree commercial burglary. On November 12, 2009, petitioner filed an opening brief on direct appeal, and on January 29, 2010, petitioner filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus in the California Court of Appeal. (Resp. Exs. 1, 2.) On November 30, 2010, the California Court of 1 Appeal affirmed the judgment and denied petitioner's petition for writ of habeas corpus. (Resp.

 2 Exs. 3, 4.) On January 5, 2011, petitioner filed a petition for review of the California Court of 3 Appeal's decision on direct appeal as well as on the petition for writ of habeas corpus. (Resp.
 4 Exs. 5, 6.) On March 16, 2011, the California Supreme Court denied both petitions for review.
 5 (Resp. Exs. 7, 8.)

6 In June 2011, petitioner filed a state habeas petition in Superior Court. (Resp. Ex. 9 at 7 82-99.) On September 13, 2011, the Superior Court denied the petition in a 5-page order. (Resp.
 8 Ex. 9 at 77-83.) Petitioner filed the same petition in both the California Court of Appeal and the 9 California Supreme Court. The petitions were summarily denied on November 30, 2011, and 10 May 16, 2012, respectively.

11 Petitioner filed the instant federal habeas petition on August 29, 2012. Petitioner raised 12 the following claims in his federal petition: (1) ineffective assistance of appellate counsel; (2) 13 ineffective assistance of trial counsel; (3) prosecutorial misconduct; (4) insufficient evidence to 14 support the convictions; (5) the trial court gave erroneous jury instructions; and (6) petitioner 15 received an unfair trial because the jury observed him in physical restraints.

16 On June 27, 2013, respondent filed the instant motion to dismiss, arguing that the court 17 should dismiss claims 1-4 as procedurally defaulted, except for the portion of those claims that 18 were also timely raised in the direct appeal.

19 DISCUSSION

20 I. Procedural Default

21 "[C]onsistent with the longstanding requirement that habeas petitioners must exhaust 22 available state remedies before seeking relief in federal court, we have held that when a 23 petitioner fails to raise his federal claims in compliance with relevant state procedural rules, the 24 state court's refusal to adjudicate the claim ordinarily qualifies as an independent and adequate 25 state ground for denying federal review." Cone v. Bell, 556 U.S. 449, 465 (2009). A federal 26 court will not review questions of federal law decided by a state court if the decision also rests 27 on a state law ground that is independent of the federal question, and adequate to support the 28

1 judgment. Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 729-30 (1991). However, this does not mean 2 “that federal habeas review is barred every time a state court invokes a procedural rule to limit 3 its review of a state prisoner’s claims.” Cone, 556 U.S. at 465.

4 Here, the California Supreme Court’s denial of petitioner’s latest state habeas petition 5 summarily denied the petition without comment. The federal habeas court generally “looks 6 through” the unreasoned decision of a state’s highest court to the last reasoned state court 7 decision on the merits, if any. See Ylst v. Nunnemaker, 501 U.S. 797, 806 (1991) (where there 8 is one reasoned state court judgment rejecting a claim, later unexplained orders are presumed to 9 rest on same ground); Cannedy v. Adams, 706 F.3d 1148, 1158-59 (9th Cir. 2013). Here, the 10 last reasoned state court decision comes from the Superior Court.

11 A. Independent and adequate state grounds

12 The Superior Court recognized that petitioner had raised one general claim of ineffective 13 assistance of appellate counsel. However, within that claim, petitioner argued that appellate 14 counsel failed to raise six additional claims.¹ (Resp. Ex. 9 at 77.) The Superior Court addressed 15 all the underlying claims in its order denying relief. First, the Superior Court recognized that the 16 six underlying claims were either already presented in a previous petition, or should have been 17 but were not, and cited to In re Clark, 15 Cal. 4th 750 (1993). Further, the Superior Court 18 commented that the entire petition was untimely because petitioner had knowledge of the factual
 19 bases for all of the claims at the time he was sentenced, and cited to In re Gallegos, 18 Cal. 4th 20 825 (1998). (Resp. Ex. 9 at 78.) In addition, the Superior Court recognized petitioner could not 21 challenge the felony murder rule through his petition because the state courts had already 22 addressed that claim on appeal, and cited to In re Waltreus, 62 Cal.2d 218, 225 (1965). (Resp.
 23 Ex. 9 at 79-80.) The Superior Court continued that In re Dixon, 41 Cal.2d 756, 759 (1953), 24 barred issues that petitioner could have raised on appeal but were not, such as the conduct of the 25

26 ¹ These claims are: (1) trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance of counsel; (2) the 27 prosecutor committed misconduct; (3) petitioner’s conviction relies on an unconstitutionally 28 vague statute; (4) the evidence was insufficient to convict on Counts 3 and 4; (5) the trial court abused its discretion; and (6) cumulative error.

1 district attorney and cumulative error. (Resp. Ex. 9 at 80.) Finally, the Superior Court stated 2 that the ineffective assistance of counsel claims were barred because of the state's rule against 3 piecemeal and successive petitions. See In re Clark, 15 Cal. 4th at 775.

4 The Superior Court's denial of the petition as untimely, with a citation to Gallegos, signal 5 that the claims were denied based on an independent and adequate state ground. See Walker v.
 6 Martin, 131 S.Ct. 1120, 1131 (2011); Bennett v. Mueller, 322 F.3d 573, 582-83 (9th Cir. 2003).
 7 Although petitioner disputes that he was untimely, it is not the province of this court to dispute a 8 state court's ruling on questions on state law. Thus, the court concludes that all of the claims 9 raised in petitioner's petition to the Superior Court were untimely under state law.

10 B. Cause and Prejudice

11 In cases in which a state prisoner has defaulted his federal claims in state court pursuant 12 to an independent and adequate state procedural rule, federal habeas review of the claims is 13 barred unless the prisoner can demonstrate cause for the default and actual prejudice as a result 14 of the alleged violation of federal law, or demonstrate that failure to consider the claims will 15 result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice. Coleman, 501 U.S. at 750. Inadequate assistance 16 of counsel, or no counsel at all, in an initial review post-conviction proceeding may establish 17 cause for a prisoner's failure to bring a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Martinez v.
 18 Ryan, 132 S. Ct. 1309, 1315 (2012).

19 Here, petitioner claims that his appellate counsel filed the first state habeas petition and 20 failed to raise the six claims petitioner raised to the Superior Court. Even assuming that 21 petitioner has established "cause," see id. at 1318-21, petitioner would only establish cause for 22 the ineffective assistance of counsel claim (Claim 1), but not for prosecutorial misconduct 23 (Claim 2), nor for insufficiency of the evidence (Claim 3) or erroneous jury instructions (Claim 24 4).² See Ha Van Nguyen v. Curry, 736 F.3d 1287, 1296 (9th Cir. 2013) ("The Martinez rule is 25 _____

26 ² Respondent notes, and the court agrees, that portions of Claim 3 and Claim 4 were 27 properly presented and exhausted when they were raised to the California Supreme Court on 28 direct appeal. (Resp. Mot. at 6.) Therefore, to the extent petitioner alleged that the evidence was insufficient to convict him of attempted robbery (Claim 3) and the jury instructions were

1 limited to an underlying Sixth Amendment ineffective-assistance claim, and to a procedural 2 default by ineffective counsel in an initial-review collateral proceeding.”). Thus, because 3 Martinez only applies to ineffective assistance of counsel claims, Claim 2 is dismissed in its 4 entirety, and the portions of Claims 3 and 4 that were not presented to the California Supreme 5 Court on direct review are dismissed.

6 Respondent first argues that Martinez is inapplicable to petitioner’s ineffective assistance 7 of appellate counsel claim because Martinez provided an equitable exception only for claims not 8 considered on the merits by a state court. (Resp. Supp. at 6.) Here, argues respondent, because 9 the Superior Court cursorily rejected petitioner’s ineffective assistance of appellate counsel 10 claim on the merits as well as because it was procedurally defaulted, Martinez is inapplicable.
 11 However, the court rejects this assertion because Martinez does not make this explicit 12 distinction.³

13 Alternatively, respondent argues that petitioner has not shown cause and prejudice under 14 Martinez for his ineffective assistance of counsel claim (Claim 1). As an initial matter, the court 15 makes clear that petitioner’s Claim 1 in this federal petition encompasses a claim of ineffective
 16 assistance of appellate counsel as well as ineffective assistance of trial counsel. (Pet. at 5-9.)

 19 erroneous with respect to implied malice and did not fully instruct the jury on second degree 20 murder (Claim 4), those claims survive this motion to dismiss.

21 ³ Respondent cites to a portion of this sentence in Martinez to support his position that 22 Martinez does not apply when the state court has considered the underlying state claims on the 23 merits: “While counsel’s errors in [other post-conviction proceedings] preclude any further 24 review of the prisoner’s claim, the claim will have been addressed by one court, whether it be the 25 trial court, the appellate court on direct review, or the trial court in an initial-review collateral 26 proceeding.” See Martinez, 132 S. Ct. at 1316. Martinez was distinguishing the difference 27 between errors made by counsel in initial review collateral proceedings and errors made by 28 counsel in all other post-conviction proceedings. Specifically, respondent asserts that this sentence means that Martinez holds that claims that have been considered, even cursorily, by the state court, cannot be saved by the cause and prejudice standard set forth in Martinez. However, this court finds respondent’s interpretation too narrow, and its application to this particular case to be improper. Cf. Bennett v. Mueller, 322 F.3d 573, 580 (9th Cir. 2003) (“A state court’s application of a procedural rule is not undermined where, as here, the state court simultaneously rejects the merits of the claim.”).

1 Petitioner raised both ineffective assistance of appellate counsel (Resp. Ex. 9 at 3) and 2 ineffective assistance of trial counsel (Resp. Ex. 9 at 4-10) in his petition for writ of habeas 3 corpus to the California Supreme Court, but did not raise a separate ineffective assistance of trial 4 counsel to the California Superior Court (Resp. Ex. 9 at 84-99). Thus, respondent's claim that 5 the Superior Court's ruling that petitioner's ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claim is 6 procedurally defaulted does not affect the status of petitioner's ineffective assistance of trial 7 counsel claim, which was raised to the California Supreme Court and denied without comment.
8 At this time, petitioner's ineffective assistance of trial counsel claim appears to be exhausted and 9 will survive this motion to dismiss.

10 In sum, petitioner's ineffective assistance of trial counsel claim (portion of Claim 1), a 11 portion of the insufficiency of the evidence claim (Claim 3), a portion of the jury instruction 12 claim (Claim 4), and the shackling claim (Claim 5) survive this motion to dismiss. Petitioner's 13 claim of prosecutorial misconduct (Claim 2) and portions of Claims 3 and 4 that were not 14 presented to the California Supreme Court on direct appeal are dismissed based on procedural 15 default. The only claim left to resolve is whether petitioner's ineffective assistance of appellate 16 counsel claim falls within the cause and prejudice standard of Martinez.

17 In order to establish cause under Martinez for the procedural default of petitioner's 18 ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claim, petitioner must show that: (1) his post-19 conviction counsel was ineffective pursuant to Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984), 20 in failing to raise the underlying ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claim; and (2) the 21 underlying ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claim is substantial. See Hurles v. Ryan, 22 752 F.3d 768, 781 (9th Cir. 2014); Nguyen, 736 F.3d at 1289. In other words, in order to 23 demonstrate "cause" under Martinez, petitioner must first show that post-conviction counsel was 24 deficient for failing to raise the ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claim that petitioner 25 raised in his first habeas petition to the Superior Court. That claim asserted that appellate 26 counsel was ineffective for failing to raise the following claims on direct appeal:
27 (1) prosecutorial misconduct; (2) the felony murder conviction rested on an unconstitutionally 28

1 vague statute; (3) insufficiency of the evidence of Counts 3 and 4; (4) abuse of discretion; (5) 2 ineffective assistance of trial counsel; and (6) cumulative error.⁴

3 The court must determine whether post-conviction counsel was deficient for failing to 4 raise any of these underlying ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claims, and if so, 5 whether petitioner was prejudiced by that deficiency. In order to do so, the court necessarily 6 must consider the strength of petitioner's argument that appellate counsel was ineffective. See 7 Clabourne v. Ryan, 745 F.3d 362, 377 (9th Cir. 2014). If, for example, the claim of ineffective 8 assistance of appellate counsel is untenable, then there could not be a reasonable probability that 9 the result of the post-conviction proceedings would have been different. Id. at 377-78 ("To 10 demonstrate that there was a reasonable probability that, absent the deficient performance, the 11 result of the post-conviction proceedings would have been different, it will generally be 12 necessary to look through to what happened at the trial [or appeal] stage."). To that end, the 13 court must consider whether the claim of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel has any 14 merit.

15 1. Prosecutorial misconduct

16 First, petitioner argues that appellate counsel should have raised a claim of prosecutorial 17 misconduct. Petitioner's challenges to the prosecutor's statements, however, are all complaints 18 about what the prosecutor implied in opening and closing arguments, as well as what the 19 prosecutor implied through his questions, and the inferences the prosecutor wanted the jury to 20 make, based on the evidence. However, none of these challenged statements was improper 21 because they were relevant to the facts and issues in the case. See Tan v. Runnels, 413 F.3d 22 1101, 1113, 1115 (9th Cir. 2005). Accordingly, appellate counsel was not deficient for failing to 23 raise this claim on appeal, and petitioner has not shown prejudice.

24 2. Unconstitutionally vague statute

25 Second, petitioner argues that appellate counsel should have raised the

26
 27 ⁴ In his petition to the Superior Court, petitioner argues ineffective assistance of trial 28 counsel first, but for ease of discussion, this court will discuss the ineffective assistance of trial counsel fifth.

1 unconstitutionality of the application of California Penal Code §§ 187 and 189 as they pertained
 2 to the felony-murder rule because they lessened the burden of proof and do not require the jury
 3 to find an element of malice. However, this claim has been rejected in both federal and state 4 courts. “[C]alifornia’s felony murder rule is not an evidentiary shortcut to finding malice, but a 5 rule of substantive law establishing a first degree murder penalty for murders which occurred in 6 the course of committing another felony [petitioner’s] intent, which the prosecution must 7 still prove, relates to the other felony rather than the murder.” See McMillan v. Gomez, 19 F.3d 8 465, 470 (9th Cir. 1994); cf. People v. Chun, 45 Cal. 4th 1172, 1184 (2009) (interpreting felony 9 murder rule as a substitute for malice). Thus, because petitioner’s claim of the 10 unconstitutionality of the felony murder rule was without merit, appellate counsel was not 11 deficient for failing to raise it on direct appeal, and petitioner has not shown prejudice.

12 3. Insufficiency of the evidence

13 Third, petitioner argues that appellate counsel should have raised the claim that the 14 evidence was insufficient to convict petitioner of Counts 3 and 4 – the attempted second degree 15 robbery of Jesse Edmonds and second degree burglary of Toys “R” Us convictions. At trial, the 16 evidence showed that petitioner went into the electronics department of Toys “R” Us at 4:21
 17 p.m., and spoke with the store cashier Taniesha Turner at 4:23 p.m. (Resp. Ex. 3 at 2.) 18 Petitioner asked to buy a Playstation 3, and Turner took a Playstation 3 out of a locked case and 19 handed it to petitioner who looked to be holding a credit card. (Id.) Petitioner was walking 20 away with the Playstation 3 when Turner told him that he needed to pay for it in the electronics 21 department. (Id.) Petitioner ignored Turner and kept walking. (Id.) When Turner followed 22 him, petitioner began to run. (Id.) Turner called for help and chased petitioner out of the store.
 23 (Id.) The store surveillance camera showed petitioner running out of the store at 4:25 p.m. (Id.)
 24 Jesse Edmonds, Turner’s co-worker, joined in the chase and followed Turner into the parking 25 lot. (Id.) At some point, Turner stumbled, and Edmonds later saw a bystander, Jose Crus, 26 blocking petitioner’s path. (Id.) As petitioner approached Crus, Crus moved out of petitioner’s 27 way, but petitioner turned toward Crus and punched him in the face. (Id.) Crus fell and hit his 28

1 head on the ground. (Id. at 2-3.) Eventually Edmonds caught up to petitioner and they 2 struggled. (Id. at 3.) Michael Cantu, another co-worker, caught up to Edmonds and petitioner
3 and all three struggled and fell to the ground. (Id.)

4 In California, the elements of attempted robbery are “that defendant specifically intended 5 to take property from Shield by force or fear, and committed a direct act toward that goal.”
6 People v. Watkins, 55 Cal.4th 999, 1019 (2012). Petitioner argues that there was no force or fear 7 employed before he punched Crus, and the punch he used was not used against Edmonds. The 8 California Court of Appeal addressed this claim indirectly when resolving petitioner’s claim of 9 insufficiency of the evidence to support a felony murder conviction. (Resp. Ex. 3 at 11-15.) The 10 California Court of Appeal concluded that an intent to steal through force or fear could be 11 inferred based upon petitioner’s actions. (Id. at 12-13.) Specifically, an intent to use force 12 against Edmonds could be inferred because petitioner assaulted Crus, who was standing in the 13 way of petitioner’s escape, and thus, petitioner was equally prepared to assault Edmonds, who 14 was pursuing him if Edmonds interfered with the asportation of the Playstation 3. (Id. at 14.)
15 Petitioner “had exhibited an overt intent to use force against anyone, including the employees, 16 who were trying to stop him, which supported a conviction of attempted robbery.” (Id.)
17 Because California law would not support a sufficiency of the evidence claim for attempted 18 robbery (Count 3), appellate counsel was not deficient for failing to raise this claim on direct 19 appeal, and petitioner has not shown prejudice.

20 In California, “[e]very person who enters any house . . . with intent to commit grand or 21 petit larceny or any felony is guilty of burglary.” Cal. Penal Code § 459. “An attempt to commit 22 a crime requires the specific intent to commit the target crime . . . and a direct but ineffectual act, 23 beyond mere preparation, done towards its commission.” People v. Booker, 51 Cal.4th 141, 175
24 (2011). Petitioner argued that he could have formed the intent to steal after he entered the store 25 and not before. “While the existence of the specific intent charged at the time of entering a 26 building is necessary to constitute burglary in order to sustain a conviction, this element is rarely 27 susceptible of direct proof and must usually be inferred from all of the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence.” People v. Holt, 519 Cal.4th 619, 670 (1997).

Here, an inference can be made that petitioner entered Toys “R” Us with the intent to steal based on the short amount of time spent between the time petitioner entered the store at 4:21 p.m., spoke with Turner to obtain the Playstation 3 at 4:23 p.m., and exited the store at 4:25 p.m. Moreover, Crus’ widow Magdalena Segura, testified that she saw petitioner in the electronics department and was suspicious of him because he was looking in all directions. After petitioner’s arrest, petitioner was found to be carrying $18 and no wallet or keys. A MasterCard was found on the ground near where petitioner struggled with Edmonds and Cantu, and that card belonged to a woman. Certainly conflicting inferences could be drawn as to when petitioner formed the intent to steal. Petitioner himself concedes that “the prosecutor never conclusively rebutted the inferences that [his] intent upon entry could have very well been to do normal, legitimate business with Toys “R” Us.” (Pet. at 19.) That a case presents conflicting inferences cannot by itself sustain a claim of insufficiency of the evidence. California law is clear that “[i]f the circumstances reasonably justify the trier of fact’s findings, reversal of the judgment is not warranted simply because the circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with a contrary finding.” People v. Lindberg, 45 Cal.4th 1, 27 (2008). Because California law would not support a lack of sufficient evidence claim for attempted burglary (Count 4), appellate counsel was not deficient for failing to raise this claim on direct appeal, and petitioner has not shown prejudice.

4. Abuse of discretion

Fourth, petitioner argues that appellate counsel should have raised the claim that the trial court abused its discretion in some of its decisions and ruling. Specifically, petitioner claims that appellate counsel should have appealed the trial court’s decision denying petitioner’s Marsden motions, the trial court’s decision denying his motion to preclude the prosecutor’s reliance on the felony murder - robbery theory, the trial court’s decision denying his motion to exclude Crus’ widow’s testimony as more prejudicial than probative, and the trial court’s decision to allow the jury to determine whether the force used against Crus converted the theft to a robbery.

1 a. Marsden motions

2 With respect to petitioner's belief that appellate counsel should have raised a claim of the 3 trial court's error in denying two Marsden motions, the record shows that appellate counsel did 4 raise a claim that the trial court failed to appoint a new and independent "conflict" counsel to 5 review and present petitioner's ineffective assistance of trial counsel claims before it denied a 6 motion for a new trial based on ineffective assistance of counsel. (Resp. Ex. 1 at 75.) A review 7 of appellant's opening brief to the California Court of Appeal demonstrates that counsel did 8 argue, and the Court of Appeal addressed, petitioner's allegations that trial counsel was 9 ineffective in failing to communicate with him, although it was under the circumstances of 10 arguing that the trial court should have appointed new counsel. (Id. at 77-78.) Specifically, on 11 appeal, appellate counsel argued that the trial court erroneously limited petitioner to discussing 12 trial counsel's ineffectiveness as to matters occurring only during trial, and the trial court did not 13 permit him to argue pre-trial matters.

14 That appellate counsel did raise a claim regarding the ineffective assistance of trial 15 counsel demonstrates that he likely considered and rejected raising the claim that the denials of 16 two previous Marsden motions were erroneous. See Cullen v. Pinholster, 131 S. Ct. 1388, 1407 17 (2011) (reaffirming that a court "must indulge [the] strong presumption that counsel made all 18 significant decisions in the exercise of reasonable professional judgment" and to entertain all the 19 potential reasons that counsel may have had for his decisions); Jones v. Barnes, 463 U.S. 745, 20 751-54 (1983) ("It is not required . . . that appellate counsel raise every colorable or 21 non-frivolous claim; effective appellate advocacy involves weeding out weaker claims in order 22 to focus on stronger ones."); see, e.g., Gray v. Greer, 800 F.2d 644, 646 (7th Cir. 1986) 23 ("Generally, only when ignored issues are clearly stronger than those presented, will the 24 presumption of effective assistance of counsel be overcome"). Moreover, in light of the trial 25 court and appellate court's rejection of petitioner's claims regarding ineffective assistance of 26 trial counsel, it is not likely that even if appellate counsel had raised what petitioner wished to be 27 raised, the result of the appeal would have been different.

b. Felony murder - robbery theory

Petitioner also argues that appellate counsel should have raised the claim that the trial court should have granted his motion in limine to preclude the prosecutor from using felony murder - robbery theory because at petitioner's preliminary hearing, the magistrate judge did not find probable cause to support that theory. However, it appears that the magistrate's conclusion was a legal finding rather than a factual finding. As such, the prosecution was not foreclosed from proceeding with that theory at trial. See People v. Superior Court (Henderson), 178 Cal. App. 3d 516, 521 (1986) ("A magistrate's factual finding that there is no evidentiary support for the charge bars the prosecutor from refileing the charge in superior court. . . . [But a] magistrate's legal conclusion that the evidence is legally insufficient to support a holding order does not preclude the prosecutor from refileing a transactionally related charge."); see also People v. Thomas, 43 Cal.3d 818, 829 (1987) ("it has long been the law in this state that an accusatory pleading charging murder need not specify degree or the manner in which the murder was committed. . . . [E]ven where the People intend to rely on a felony-murder theory, the underlying felony need not be pleaded in the information."). Accordingly, appellate counsel was not deficient for raising this claim on appeal, nor has petitioner shown prejudice.

c. Testimony of Magdalena Segura

Petitioner claims that appellate counsel should have raised the claim that the trial court erred in not excluding Magdalena Segura's testimony at trial. Segura was Crus' widow, and when she testified, she became emotional and cried. Petitioner asserts that reaction on the stand was prejudicial and unfairly aroused the emotions of the jurors. However, California case law has stated that witnesses who are close to victims are likely to become upset when having to talk about circumstances surrounding the victims' deaths. People v. Thomas, 53 Cal.4th 771, 807 (2012). "Nevertheless, absent evidence to the contrary, we may assume that the jurors were able to face [their] duty calmly and undismayed." Id. (quoting People v. Crittenden, 9 Cal.4th 83, 134 (1994)). Here, Segura testified about observing petitioner in the Toys "R" Us electronics department acting suspiciously enough for Segura to fear that petitioner was "going to do

1 something bad.” Because jurors are assumed to have faced their duty calmly despite Segura’s 2 emotional testimony, appellate counsel was not deficient for failing to raise this claim on direct 3 appeal. Even assuming that he was deficient, however, petitioner has not demonstrated that he 4 was prejudiced by this omission. Based on the strength of the evidence presented at trial, there is 5 not a reasonable likelihood that if appellate counsel had presented the issue, the result of the 6 appeal would have been different.

7 d. Force against Crus

8 Petitioner’s argument that the jury should not have been able to decide whether the force 9 used against Crus converted the crime from a theft to a robbery is unpersuasive. The California 10 Court of Appeal indirectly addressed the gravamen of this claim which is that because petitioner 11 did not directly use force on any store employee prior to the moment he struck Crus, he should 12 not be guilty of attempted robbery. However, the state appellate court rejected this notion in 13 dicta. (Resp. Ex. 3 at 14-15.) Specifically, the jury was permitted to determine whether 14 petitioner formed the specific intent to use force against the employees, and the evidence 15 permitted the inference that petitioner was prepared to use that same force against the chasing 16 employees. (Id.) Thus, appellate counsel was not deficient for failing to raise this claim on 17 appeal, nor has petitioner shown prejudice.

18 5. Ineffective assistance of trial counsel

19 Fifth, petitioner argued that appellate counsel should have raised a claim of ineffective 20 assistance of trial counsel. Specifically, petitioner argues that counsel was not communicating 21 with him and failed to answer petitioner’s questions; counsel failed to uphold petitioner’s speedy 22 trial rights; counsel failed to acquire newspaper articles about the victim’s death in order to 23 impeach the victim’s widow’s knowledge of what had happened; counsel failed to call Michael 24 Stevens, a favorable defense witness; counsel failed to file a Section 995 motion to set aside one 25 of the charges; and counsel failed to investigate information about the owner of the debit card 26 petitioner had at the time of the crimes.

27 Again, that appellate counsel did raise a claim regarding the ineffective assistance of trial 28

1 counsel demonstrates that he likely considered and rejected a standalone claim of ineffective 2 assistance of trial counsel. See Cullen, 131 S. Ct. at 1407; Jones, 463 U.S. at 751-54. In his 3 opening brief to the state appellate court, appellate counsel mentioned most of the claims that 4 petitioner raises in his habeas petition to the Superior Court - namely that trial counsel failed to 5 communicate with him (Resp. Ex. 1 at 77-78), disregarded petitioner's right to exercise his 6 speedy trial rights (id. at 78), failed to call favorable defense witnesses (id. at 77-81), failed to 7 file a Section 995 motion (id. at 77), and failed to investigate information about the owner of the 8 debit card (id. at 78-79). Cognizant of the strong presumption that appellate counsel's conduct 9 fell within the range of reasonable professional decisions, the omission of these particular claims 10 on direct appeal is insufficient to demonstrate that appellate counsel was deficient, especially in 11 light of the fact that appellate counsel was clearly aware of these claims yet chose not to raise 12 them. See Strickland, 466 U.S. at 689. There is no indication that the omitted claims were 13 stronger than the six claims that appellate counsel did present.

14 Moreover, with respect to petitioner's claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing 15 to call Michael Stevens as a defense witness, petitioner fails to demonstrate that he was 16 prejudiced by this failure. Specifically, petitioner claims that Stevens would have testified about 17 the relationship between petitioner and Lindsay Silva, the owner of the debit card, which was 18 found on petitioner just after the crimes. (Docket No. 37-2 at 11.) This witness would have 19 rebutted the prosecutor's implication that petitioner had possession of a stolen debit card, and 20 testified that Stevens owed petitioner money around the time of the crime. (Id.; Docket No. 23-2 21 at 7.) At trial, the jury heard evidence that petitioner ran out of the store with the Playstation 3, 22 was chased by store employees, hit Crus when Crus tried to stop petitioner which resulted in 23 Crus' death, and eventually was caught when store employees struggled with and subdued 24 petitioner. Thus, even if Michael Stevens testified at trial, there is no reasonable probability that 25 the outcome of trial would have been different.

26 Petitioner's only remaining claim is that trial counsel failed to present newspaper articles 27 regarding Crus' death which quoted Crus' family members as stating that they did not know the 28

1 specifics surrounding Crus' death. Petitioner wanted counsel to produce these articles to 2 impeach Crus' widow, who at trial, testified with "improved recall" more than one year after the 3 incident. Petitioner asserts that the production of the articles could have had the effect of having 4 the jurors be more wary of Segura's testimony. Here, Segura identified petitioner in the 5 courtroom as the man who cause Crus' death, and testified that she saw petitioner acting 6 suspiciously in the store prior to the robbery. (Resp. Ex. 1 at 8, n.7.) Trial counsel could have 7 made a strategic decision not to impeach Segura, who was rather emotional in front of the jury, 8 on the accuracy of her memory and in fact, according to petitioner, told him that she did not 9 believe that the articles had any probative value.

10 Appellate counsel's decisions not to raise these claims of ineffective assistance of trial 11 counsel on appeal falls within the wide range of reasonable professional decisions, and petitioner 12 has failed to demonstrate prejudice.

13 6. Cumulative error

14 Petitioner claims that appellate counsel should have raised the claim of cumulative error 15 on appeal. However, because this court has determined that none of the claims that appellate 16 counsel raised on direct appeal, and none of the claims that petitioner asserts he should have 17 raised, have any merit, appellate counsel's failure to raise a claim of cumulative error was not 18 ineffective. Moreover, based on the above discussions, petitioner cannot demonstrate prejudice 19 from this omission.

20 Accordingly, petitioner has not demonstrated that post-conviction counsel was ineffective 21 pursuant to Strickland for failing to raise a claim of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel.
22 As such, petitioner's ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claim is procedurally defaulted.

23 II. Pending motions

24 Petitioner filed a motion for relief "based on the state court's acquiescence on facts 25 presented in claim." (Docket No. 44.) In essence, petitioner argues that because the Superior 26 Court did not address plaintiff's entire claim regarding the unconstitutionality of California Penal 27 Code §§ 187 and 189, the court's silence equals acquiescence. This court construes petitioner's 28

1 motion as a motion to supplement petitioner's federal petition. So construed, the motion is 2 DENIED. Petitioner did not raise this claim as a standalone claim in his federal petition.
 3 Petitioner has only raised this claim as a subset of petitioner's claim that appellate counsel was 4 ineffective for failing to raise several claims on appeal, which is procedurally barred from 5 federal habeas corpus review.

6 Petitioner has also filed a motion for leave to amend the prayer for relief. (Docket No.
 7 47.) Specifically, petitioner states that he is not opposed to a reduction of his convictions to 8 lesser included offenses, and petitioner is also open to a new plea agreement. However, the 9 power of a federal habeas court "lies to enforce the right of personal liberty." Fay v. Noia, 372
 10 U.S. 391, 430 (1963), overruled on other grounds by Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72, 87 11 (1977). As such, "it has no other power; it cannot revise the state court judgment; it can act only 12 on the body of the petitioner." Fay, 372 U.S. at 431. Accordingly, petitioner's motion is 13 DENIED.

14 CONCLUSION

15 1. Respondent's motion to dismiss the petition (docket no. 23) is GRANTED in part.
 16 Petitioner's claim of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel (portion of Claim 1), 17 prosecutorial misconduct (Claim 2) and portions of Claims 3 and 4 that were not presented to the 18 California Supreme Court on direct appeal are DISMISSED based on procedural default.

19 Petitioner's ineffective assistance of trial counsel claim (the remaining portion of Claim 20 1); a portion of the insufficiency of the evidence claim, i.e., that the evidence was insufficient to 21 convict petitioner of first degree murder on a felony murder theory and the evidence was 22 insufficient to convict petitioner of attempted robbery of Turner (Claim 3); the jury instruction 23 claim, i.e., the trial court gave incomplete jury instructions on second degree implied malice 24 murder (Claim 4); and the shackling claim (Claim 5) survive this motion to dismiss.

25 2. Petitioner's motion for relief is DENIED. (Docket No. 44.) Petitioner's motion
 26 for leave to amend the prayer for relief is DENIED. (Docket No. 47.)

27 3. Respondent shall file with the court and serve on petitioner, within sixty days of 28

1 the date this order is filed, an answer conforming in all respects to Rule 5 of the Rules Governing 2 Section 2254 Cases, showing cause why a writ of habeas corpus should not be granted.
 3 Respondent shall file with the answer and serve on petitioner a copy of all portions of the 4 underlying state criminal record that have been transcribed previously and that are relevant to a 5 determination of the issues presented by the petition. If petitioner wishes to respond to the 6 answer, he shall do so by filing a traverse with the court and serving it on respondent within 7 thirty days of the date the answer is filed.

8 4. Respondent may file a motion to dismiss on procedural grounds in lieu of an answer, 9 as set forth in the Advisory Committee Notes to Rule 4 of the Rules Governing Section 2254 Cases 10 within sixty days of the date this order is filed. If respondent files such a motion, petitioner shall 11 file with the court and serve on respondent an opposition or statement of non-opposition within 12 twenty-eight days of the date the motion is filed, and respondent shall file with the court and serve 13 on petitioner a reply within fourteen days of the date any opposition is filed.

14 5. It is petitioner's responsibility to prosecute this case. Petitioner is reminded that all 15 communications with the court must be served on respondent by mailing a true copy of the 16 document to respondent's counsel. Petitioner must keep the court and all parties informed of any 17 change of address by filing a separate paper captioned "Notice of Change of Address." He must 18 comply with the court's orders in a timely fashion. Failure to do so may result in the dismissal of 19 this action for failure to prosecute. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(b).
